Applications for 2014 Davidson Family Fellowship at Amon Carter

The Amon Carter Museum of American Art invites applications for its 2014 Davidson Family Fellowship. Established in 1996 by a generous gift from the Davidson Family Charitable Foundation, the Amon Carter's Davidson Family Fellowship provides support for scholars holding the PhD (or equivalent) or PhD candidates to work on research projects in American art that advance scholarship by connecting with objects in the museum's permanent collection.

Successful candidates should have an in-depth knowledge of the history of American art and culture in areas represented by the museum's collections that is demonstrated in coursework and/or publications. Proposals from qualified individuals in disciplines other than art history are also encouraged. Preference will be given to projects that most fully leverage the complement of collections and research resources available at the museum. Awards are based on merit and are open to all qualified individuals. Applicants may be affiliated with a university, museum, or independent.

The stipend rate is $3,000 per month. The fellowship may range from a minimum one-month to a maximum four-month period of full-time research at the museum. The application deadline is April 15, 2014, for a fellowship period to start on or after September 1, 2014. Housing and travel expenses are to be managed by the fellow, although the museum is available for assistance in locating accommodations. The museum will announce awards by May 31, 2014.

Gabriel Ritter

The Nancy and Tim Hanley
Assistant Curator of Contemporary Art
Dallas Museum of Art

Gabriel Ritter assumed the role of The Nancy and Tim Hanley Assistant Curator of Contemporary Art at the Dallas Museum of Art in May 2012.

Ritter works closely with Jeffrey Grove, Senior Curator of Special Projects & Research, on a number of projects, including the organization of exhibitions in the Concentrations series, focused on internationally emerging and underrepresented artists, as well as other exhibitions. Ritter also works with artists and organizations in the Dallas area to strengthen relationships and programs, as well as conduct research on the collection, make acquisitions, and collaborate on installations of the collection in galleries throughout the Museum. Upcoming projects at the DMA include Concentrations series exhibitions with Stephen Lapthosophon, Slavs and Tatars, and Chosil Kil, as well as a major two-person survey of Shiraga Kazuo and Motonaga Sadamasa, co-organized with the Japan Foundation, Tokyo in 2015.

One of his first projects at the DMA was to serve as the curator for the Dallas presentation of the nationally touring exhibition Cindy Sherman (2013). He also served as the curator of the DMA organized exhibition DallasSITES: Charting Contemporary Art, 1963 to Present, an exhibition celebrating the history of North Texas's bold and distinctive art scene, and the accompanying DallasSITES: Available Space installation (2013).

Ritter has worked internationally in museums and has served as an independent curator, organizing exhibitions of emerging artists from the United States, Europe, and Asia. He has delivered numerous scholarly papers and contributed to publications, including feature articles for ArtAsiaPacific magazine and essays for monographs on the artists Makoto Aida and Koki Tanaka. Ritter organized the 2012 Sculpture by Other Means exhibition at the ONE AND J. Gallery in Seoul, Korea, featuring work by Masaya Chiba, Tepei Kaneuji, Yuki Kimura, and Koki Tanaka. Most recently, he served as one of three co-curators for the exhibition Roppongi Crossing 2013: OUT OF DOUBT currently on view at the Mori Art Museum, Tokyo. Ritter is one of the first non-Japanese curators to participate in this triennial series of exhibitions founded in 2004.

Ritter is currently completing his Ph.D. in Art History at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), where he also earned his masters of art history. Most recently he completed a Japan Foundation Doctoral Fellowship at the National Museum of Modern Art where he researched Japanese surrealism of the 1930-40s. Previously a Curatorial Assistant at the Museum of Contemporary Art, Los Angeles (MOCA) for three years, Ritter organized Out of the Ordinary: New Video from Japan and MOCA Focus: Karl Haendel, the first solo museum exhibition and publication dedicated to the artist. As Curatorial Assistant to former MOCA Senior Curator Ann Goldstein, Ritter also assisted on a number of exhibitions including The Art of Richard Tuttle and Martin Kippenberger: The Problem Perspective.

FIRST SERIES OF DMA PAINTING CONSERVATION PROJECTS

The first four paintings from private collections to undergo conservation treatment in the DMA's new Paintings Conservation Studio are now on view in the Dallas Museum of Art's European galleries on Level 2. One of the four, The Blacksmith Cupids by Charles-Antoine Coypel, has subsequently entered the DMA's permanent collection. The remaining three loans, along with the Coypel, are part of the Museum's new conservation program to collaborate with private collectors on the study and care of their collections, and then present the works in the DMA galleries for public viewing.

In addition to Charles-Antoine Coypel's The Blacksmith Cupids, the newly restored loaned works include Jean-Baptiste Oudry's 18th-century painting Dogs Playing with Birds in a Park; a masterpiece of early Renaissance Netherlandish painting, Saint Ursula Protecting the Eleven Thousand Virgins with Her Cloak; and an Italian 14th-century painted wood panel showing the martyrdom of an early Christian saint.

"Conservation loans are a significant part of our plans to expand the DMA's in-house conservation program," said Mark Leonard, chief conservator at the DMA. "In many instances, these types of partnerships result in the opportunity to exhibit the works on public view for a period of time after completion of the conservation treatment, and in the case of the Coypel, add the work to the Museum's collection. We are extremely grateful and excited by this opportunity."

Jean-Baptiste Oudry's Dogs Playing with Birds in a Park, painted in 1754, is now installed next to the Oudry's Water Spaniel Confronting a Heron in the DMA's European gallery. The French artist was well known for his "portraits" of animals, particularly the favorite dogs of his aristocratic and royal clients. Saint Ursula Protecting the Eleven Thousand Virgins with Her Cloak is an exquisite example of Renaissance painting from the Netherlands. With this painting, the DMA exhibits for the first time a work by the artist known as The Master of the Legend of St. Barbara, who was active between 1470 and 1500. The oldest of the three loaned works can be dated to as early as 1390. This rare fragment of a predella (a series of scenes commonly found at the base of large Italian Renaissance altarpieces) is by the artist Gregorio de Cecco di Luca of Siena. The superbly painted panel shows a scene of an early Christian saint reverently kneeling in prayer awaiting his death.

Charles-Antoine Coypel's The Blacksmith Cupids from c. 1715–1720 is a highly finished preparatory sketch for a decoration Coypel made for the space above the fireplace in the bedroom of Louis d'Orléans, duc de Chartres, in his apartments at the Palais-Royal in Paris. This painting is a fascinating rediscovery of a work thought to have been lost since 1752, when it last appeared at the estate sale of the artist's brother. It is the first work by this artist to enter the DMA's collection.

Dallas Nine Artist Alexandre Hogue at the DMA

Thomas May, Jr., © Olivia Hogue Mariño & Amalia Mariño

Alexandre Hogue: The Erosion Series presents the first exhibition ever devoted to a review of the works that made the artist both famous and infamous during the unfolding of the Dust Bowl in the 1930s. The exhibition, on view February 16 through June 15, 2014, features more than 25 works from private collections and public institutions, including that of the DMA, by this member of the so-called “Dallas Nine.” Alexandre Hogue: The Erosion Series is drawn, in part, from the touring exhibition Alexandre Hogue: An American Visionary—Paintings and Works on Paper, organized by the Rockwell Museum of Western Art in Corning, New York. Additional loans arranged by the DMA will make the Dallas presentation unique, and provide a full account of this important body of work.

Alexandre Hogue’s deep concern for environmental issues spanned the entirety of his career. The land-management failures that spawned the devastation of the Dust Bowl decade of the 1930s were witnessed by Hogue firsthand on his brother-in-law’s ranch near Dalhart, Texas, and became the impetus for some of the artist’s most powerful imagery—the Erosion series. Works such as the DMA’s own Drouth Stricken Area served as an alarm to the public and an accusation and rebuke to powers that, through encouraging poor farming practices, had helped to produce the greatest ecological disaster in American history.

“Current drought conditions and the decreasing water supplies in the Southwest certainly make Hogue’s striking imagery from the “dirty 30s” seem amazingly prescient,” said Sue Canterbury, The Pauline Gill Sullivan Associate Curator of American Art at the Dallas Museum of Art. “The Dust Bowl was a man-made disaster, and it is impossible to view these works without considering the choices we each need to make in our relationship with the environment and our use of its resources.”

Born in Missouri in 1898, Hogue moved with his family to Denton, Texas, early in his life. After a year at the Minneapolis College of Art and Design and a short stint as an illustrator at the Dallas Morning News, Hogue moved to New York City in the early 1920s to work in advertising and study in the city’s museums. Every summer, Hogue would return to Texas, eventually moving back in 1925 to work with fellow artists. In the early 1930s, Hogue became one of the original members of the Dallas Nine, a group of painters, printmakers and sculptors active in Dallas who focused on the Southwest landscape as their inspiration. The group, active from the 1930s into the early 1940s, presented their work a number of times at the Dallas Museum of Art, including in Exhibition of Young Dallas Painters: The Dallas Nine in 1932 at the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, and they were the focus of the 1985 exhibition Lone Star Regionalism: The Dallas Nine and Their Circle, 1928–1945. Hogue moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma, and was head of the art department at the University of Tulsa from 1945 to 1963; he remained in Tulsa until his death in 1994.

Amon Carter, DMA and Nasher bring their masterpieces onto the Google Art Project

The Amon Carter Museum of American Art, the Dallas Museum of Art and the Nasher Sculpture Center announced today that together these three North Texas museums are adding more than a combined 1,700 high-resolution works of art to the Google Art Project. The Art Project allows online visitors to explore the museums' paintings, sculptures and other objects virtually.

Highlights from the 1,200 images submitted by the Amon Carter showcase work by some of the greatest names in American art, such as Mary Cassatt, John Singer Sargent and James McNeill Whistler, along with 200 photographs from the collection. The DMA contributed images from the Museum's encyclopedic collection, which spans 5,000 years of human creativity. Highlights from the more than 500 works of art the DMA submitted include Sheaves of Wheat by Vincent van Gogh and a gold Sicán ceremonial mask from Peru. The Nasher's submissions from their internationally acclaimed collection of modern and contemporary sculpture include Auguste Rodin's The Age of Bronze and Mark di Suvero's Eviva Amore. The resolution of these images, combined with a custom-built zoom viewer, allows art lovers to discover minute aspects of objects they likely have never seen up close before.

Visitors to the Google Art Project can browse works by the artist's name, the artwork, the type of art, the museum, the country, collections and the time period. Google+ and video hangouts are integrated on the site, allowing viewers to invite their friends to view and discuss their favorite works in a video chat or follow a guided tour from an expert to gain an appreciation of a particular topic or art collection.

The "My Gallery" feature allows users to save specific views of any works of art and build their own personalized gallery. Comments can be added to each painting, and the whole gallery can then be shared with friends and family. It's an ideal tool for students or groups to work on collaborative projects or collections. In addition, a feature called "Compare" allows you to examine two pieces of artwork side-by-side to look at how an artist's style evolved over time, connect trends across cultures or delve deeply into two parts of the same work. To date, more than 57,000 high-resolution objects are available in the Art Project.

The Art Project is part of the Google Cultural Institute, which is dedicated to creating technology that helps the cultural community bring their art, archives, heritage sites and other material online. The aim is to increase the range and volume of material from the cultural world that is available for people to explore online and, in doing so, democratize access to it and preserve it for future generations.

DMA receives Keir Collection Of Islamic Art

The Dallas Museum of Art announced that it will receive a long-term loan of one of the world's largest private holdings of Islamic art, transforming the Museum's Islamic art collection into the third largest of its kind in North America. Assembled over the course of five decades by the noted art collector Edmund de Unger (1918–2011), the Keir Collection is recognized by scholars as one of the world's most geographically and historically comprehensive, encompassing almost 2,000 works in a range of media that span 13 centuries of Islamic art-making. This rarely exhibited collection will arrive at the DMA in May 2014 on a 15-year renewable loan, advancing the Museum's growing focus on new models for collection-building and cultural exchange.
